

The impact of reforms

Saturday, 21 November 2009

It is anticipated that at least for a short period to raise the standard of living, both through changes in agriculture and as a result of birth control. The fact is that in large populations has increased to an extent noticeable (especially in big cities, Beijing, Shanghai).

Farmers still need to continue to carry out its schedule of production, but the surplus they can sell on the open market. Some of these profits is spent on the establishment of small factories and workshops producing, among other items, so well known, umbrellas, textiles and agricultural tools. A similar system used in the industry affected the quality of products and increase their range. China now produces more steel than any country in Western Europe. There are also a leading producer of cotton. It produces millions of televisions, washing machines, watches, tape recorders. (However, because the prices are not available for many Chinese.)